

Learning Styles

I find my results from the learning styles quiz really funny. They are all very similar, I need a lot of aspects so I can fully understand the things I am learning about. Personally, it also depends on what I am trying to learn about. For artistic processes, I need to watch someone do it, and then I have to fiddle with it until I understand it. I feel like my results lend to the idea that learning styles aren't as impactful as some believe because I got very similar scores in each category. If I have to learn something new the ideal situation for me is to have at least two learning styles being met at the same time. For example, listening to a lecture and also being able to read a transcript of what is being said or following along with my clay with a demonstration of a ceramic technique.

Your Scores:

- Auditory: 35%
- Tactile: 35%
- Visual: 30%